The Margo Lang Children's Crisis Stabilization Unit

An unexpected crisis can happen to a child at any time when they are feeling overwhelmed by their own feelings or when the demands of life surpass their ability to cope.

A possible crisis may occur in response to a recent traumatic event or result from an accumulation of stressors over a period of time. Mental health issues experienced by children in crisis may include aggression or problems controlling anger, difficulties getting along with peers or adults, managing worries and other troubling feelings and thoughts. These children may feel sad or worthless and engage in self-injurious behavior, sometimes even suicide attempts, while trying to cope with significant losses, traumas, or other major life events and changes.

As a parent, caregiver or treatment professional, no wish is more urgent than to ease the pain and anguish of a child that is experiencing a traumatic situation, or wishes to end their own life. A crisis stabilization unit is no place for a child, but unfortunately for one with a serious mental illness, this is the safest place for them to be.

Needs Appeal: Julie's Story

Many may recall Julie sharing her story with us during our Summer Ball fundraiser. Julie has a son who has been admitted into several crisis stabilization units. She describes them cold, sterile, and a scary place. She explained that a CSU with bright colors, books, and a welcoming environment would help make a parent's mind more calm.

The Margo Lang Children's CSU (cont'd from page 1)

When a child needs the medical expertise, support, and treatment available at a crisis stabilization unit, they should have immediate access to it, in their local community.

Unfortunately, these beds have not been available in Charlotte County for our kids and Fred Lang is partnering with CBHC to fix this problem, and expand our Children's Unit capacity.

The Fred Lang Foundation created a needs appeal at last year's Summer Ball. The appeal was to provide the new Margo Lang Children's Crisis Unit to furnish the CSU with a child-friendly and family-centered environment. Thanks to you, our donors and sponsors, this safe place for children will be opening soon.

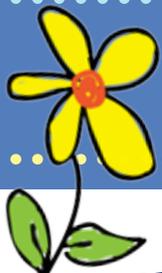

The new patient rooms and day room will be furnished with comfortable surroundings to encourage family interaction and provide a feeling of peace to our admitted children. By expanding the Margo Lang Children's Crisis Unit and enhancing the facilities and services available to children in our community, the Fred Lang Foundation hopes to relieve the fear associated with stabilizing a crisis and replace it with comfort, hope, and healing.

This safe place that you helped us create is where the healing begins.

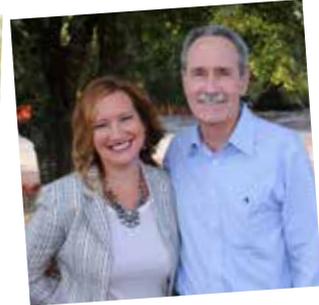

Last November, the expansion on the Margo Lang Children's Crisis Unit began. The Unit will be expanded into a ten bed facility designed and built to provide help to children and adolescents ages 5-17 and their families in crisis.

Each child that is admitted is evaluated by a licensed therapist, and a child psychiatrist may then recommend an inpatient stay of 72 hours to stabilize symptoms.

The CSU serves to help children and their families stabilize the situation and return to pre-crisis levels of functioning. Our therapists create individualized treatment plans for the child and family that address the issue and help problem solve the issue that may have contributed to the crisis. The services provided at CBHC are focused on supporting relationships with family and friends, and assisting with their ability to get along with others and function effectively at home, in school, and in the community. The staff work collaboratively with the families current providers and provide information to additional programs and resources available in the community.
