

Mental disorders are one of the most prevalent illnesses affecting youth today. Much of the research today supports the notion that mental illness contributes greatly to both mental and physical long-term health issues and as a result has a great impact on societal costs. According to the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH), half of all lifetime cases of mental health disorders had begun by age 14 and three quarters have begun by age 24. It is crucial that early identification and intervention are a part of mental health treatment systems of care in efforts to decrease both short- and long-term morbidity while improving outcomes.
